

Course Description

AMH2035 | Recent American History Since 1945 | 3.00 credits

The internal development of the United States and the role of the U.S. in world affairs since World War II.

Course Competencies:

Competency 1: The student will explore the internal development of the United States and its role in world affairs since World War II by analyzing key political, economic, and social changes within the country by:

1. analyzing the key political, economic, and social changes within the United States since World War II, identifying their impact on the nation's internal development and its role in global affairs.
2. evaluating the interplay between political, economic, and social changes in the United States post-World War II, discerning their significance in shaping its position in international relations.
3. assessing historical and contemporary implications of political, economic, and social changes within the United States, relating them to the nation's evolving role in global affairs.

Competency 2: The student will discuss the United States' internal development and the U.S.'s role in world affairs since World War II. They will be studied by examining the impact of major historical events on the nation's domestic policies and international relations by:

1. analyzing the impact of major historical events on the United States' domestic policies and international relations, identifying the key factors that have shaped the nation's development and global role.
2. evaluating the historical events that have influenced the nation's domestic policies and international relations since World War II, discerning their significance in shaping the country's position in global affairs.
3. assessing major historical events' historical and contemporary implications on the United States' domestic policies and international relations, correlating them to the nation's evolving role in global affairs.

Competency 3: The student internal development of the United States and the role of the U.S. in world affairs since World War II will be understood by evaluating the evolving ideologies and geopolitical strategies that have shaped the country's position on the global stage by:

1. analyzing the evolving ideologies and geopolitical strategies that have shaped the country's position on the global stage, identifying the key factors that have influenced the U.S.'s role in world affairs since World War II.
2. evaluating the evolving ideologies and geopolitical strategies, discerning their significance in shaping the country's position on the global stage, and understanding their impact on international relations.
3. assessing the historical and contemporary implications of the evolving ideologies and geopolitical strategies that have influenced the country's position on the global stage, correlating them to the nation's evolving role in global affairs.

Competency 4: The student internal development of the United States and the role of the U.S. in world affairs since World War II will be analyzed by considering the cultural, economic, and technological factors that have influenced the nation's trajectory in international relations by:

1. assessing the cultural, economic, and technological factors that have influenced the nation's trajectory in international relations, recognizing their impact on the U.S.'s role in world affairs and domestic policies.
2. examining the cultural, economic, and technological factors that have shaped the nation's trajectory in international relations, identifying the interconnections between these factors and the country's evolving global position.
3. investigating the historical and contemporary implications of the cultural, economic, and technological factors that have influenced the nation's trajectory in international relations, correlating them to the U.S.'s evolving role in global affairs.

Learning Outcomes:

- Communicate effectively using listening, speaking, reading, and writing skills
- Solve problems using critical and creative thinking and scientific reasoning